AGED IN THE WOOD.

A cat and mouse are walking back and forth near a home brew still, under a tree. The cat gives the mouse a shot of the hootch, making him go head over heels out to right. The Mouse lands by the tree and the cat sets to stirring the liquor. A parrot standing on a cage looks around, peeks into the house and then flies to where the cat is. The cat gives him a drink, which sends him out flying. She flops down next to the mouse. After filling the bottle and taking a shot of it the bottle turns into a mule, kicks the cat out. He too lands where the parrot and the mouse are. Some dogs come into the scene and point, the farmer looking down the line sees the cat playing a flute and bottles dancing. He shoots from dogs back and the bullet hits the tree, frightening the bottles into running away. The second bullet hits the still and snakes come out of it and chase the cat. The cat in his flight followed by the snakes scares a cow who joins in the chase and finally tosses cat up into the air. He lands on the bottom of the moon, where a mouse is swinging. He tries to creep up on the mouse but is seen first and another chase begins. The mouse gets away. Soon, at his side, the skeleton of a dog comes in, barks at the cat who manages to get away. An elephant floating in the distance lands on the globe, sucks the water off the earth, eats the stars and moon and other heavenly planets. He puts his trunk out and grabs the tree with the cat on it. The elephant shakes the cat out and makes him land in the big dipper. The dipper upsets and spills the cat and the water. The cat lands under water and is vamped by a mermaid. She runs away doing a dance and the enamoured cat pursues. He finally corners her and dances her into a heart shaped grotto. He dances with her and comes to only to find himself dancing with the parrot. The cat, much upset and disgusted, crowns the parrot and is crowned in return. They both fall to the ground again and realize that, "Good Wine Makes a Bad Head and a Long Story."
